DHEERAN

Betrayed but Unbowed

Dheeran Chinnamalai was born into the Melapalayam noble family in Kongu Nadu. He grew up in a wealthy estate with five siblings: an elder brother named Kulandaiswamy, three younger brothers, and a younger sister named Parvatham.

As the years passed, his family grew. His youngest sister, Parvatham, married the noble Palaniswamy Ulagudaiyar of Ulagapuram, while his elder brother, Kulandaiswamy, married Kembayammal , the daughter of their maternal uncle Ariyapatti amavasay gounder.

Dheeran and his younger brothers cared deeply for the common people. Fueled by national fervor, they sought to raise a formidable youth army, ready to fight for their nation. After exhausting days of political and social work, they would often bring large, hungry crowds back to their home at all hours of the night to feed them.

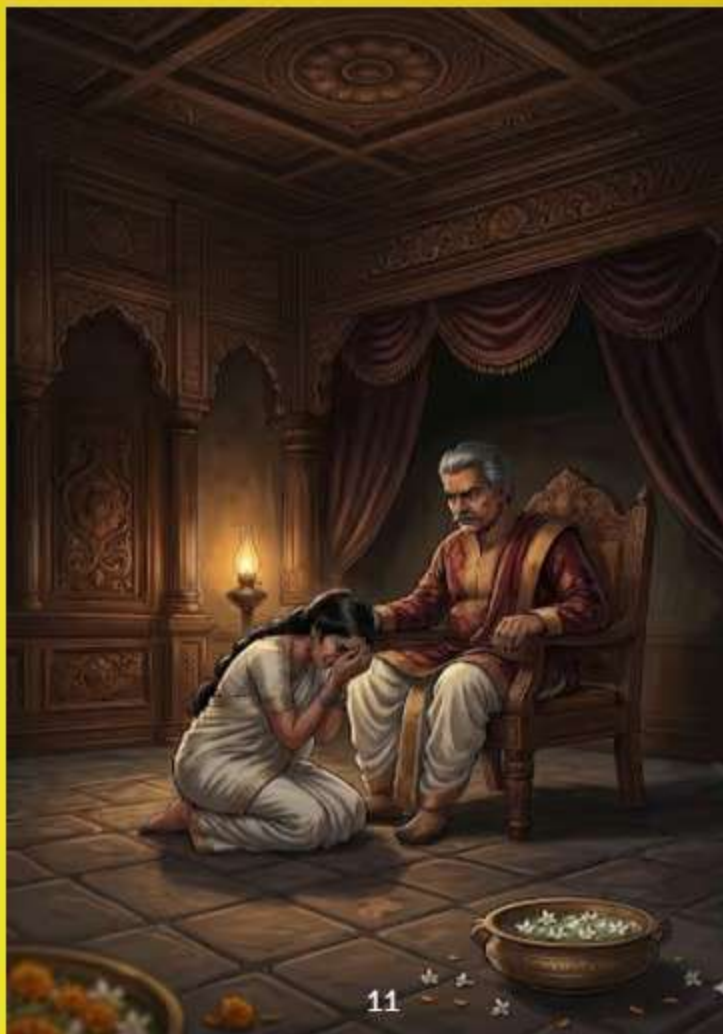

This greatly irritated Dheeran's sister-in-law, Kembayammal, who managed the household. She had to make sure food was ready for these massive entourages late into the night. She also worried constantly that Dheeran was draining her husband's family wealth.

Exhausted and angry, she complained to her wealthy father often.

One day, Kembayammal cried that she would rather die than go back and labor like a servant in the hell of her husband's house and watch Dheeran drain the wealth of her husband's household.

Her father, the Ariyapatti uncle, was furious. He wanted to teach Dheeran a harsh lesson by insulting him in public, and he hired a group of cruel henchmen to do the job.

They chose the grand Chennimalai temple Car festival for his trap.

Thousands of devotees have gathered for the event and Dheeran was also completely immersed in the joy and devotion of the celebration, suspecting nothing.

Suddenly, Ariyapatti uncle's henchmen struck!

They ambushed Dheeran in the middle of the crowded festival before he could even draw a weapon or call for his brothers.

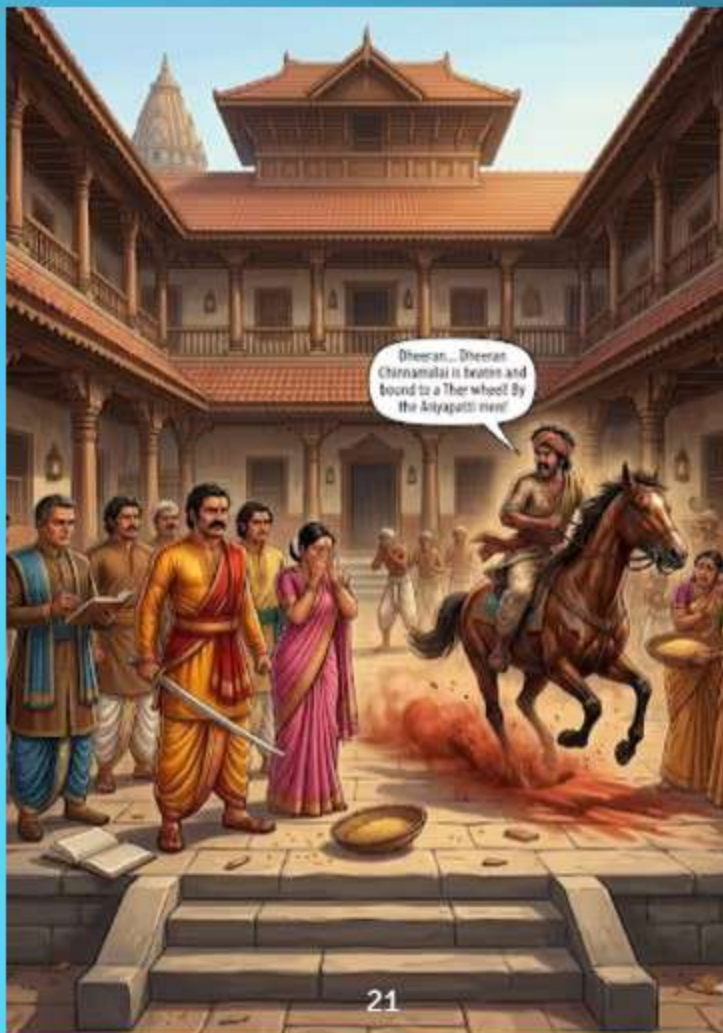

Just as they were instructed, by their boss Ariyapatti Amavasay maman, the henchmen tied the brave Dheeran to the heavy chariot wheel and beat him in front of the thousands of devotees gathered, thus hoping to break his pride in front of everyone.

But Dheeran was not alone.

The terrible news traveled fast, reaching the northern village of Ulagapuram, where his sister
Parvatham lived.

Parvatham's husband, Palaniswamy
Ulagudaiyar, and the fierce elder Kothukarar Rasappa Gounder wasted no time. They rallied the men of Ulagapuram and charged toward Chennimalai!

Proceeding faster than the wind, the Ulagapuram warriors arrived like a roaring storm! They clashed fiercely with the Ariyapatti henchmen to protect Dheeran and his brothers.

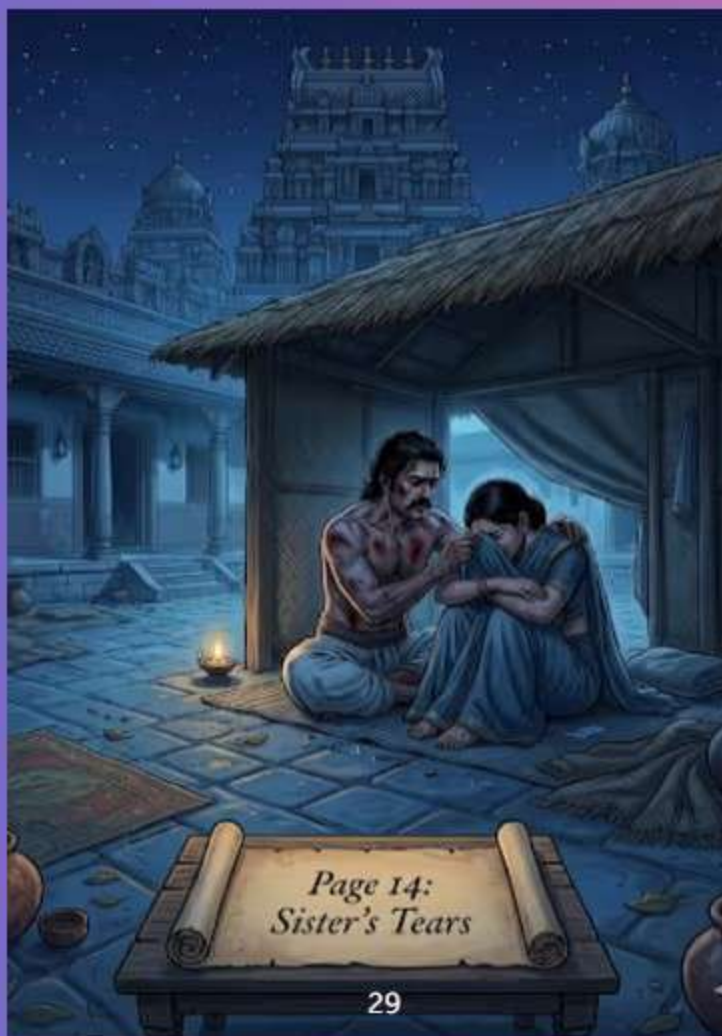

Outmatched and terrified, the cowardly henchmen ran away. Dheeran was finally freed from the chariot wheel by his Brother-in-Law Palaniswamy and the proud warriors of Ulagapuram.

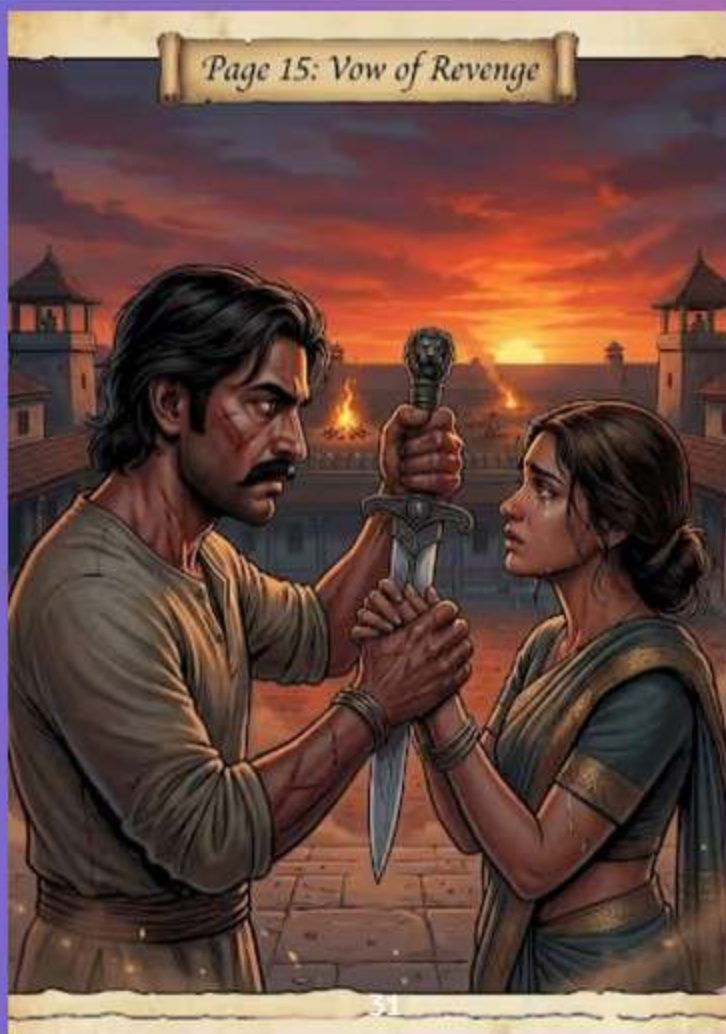

Parvatham wept, her chest tight with a bitterness that tasted like ash. The news of what had befallen her brothers in Chennimalai felt like a brand upon her own skin.

"They should not get away with this," she hissed through her tears, the pain of the insult fueling a new, dark purpose.

To console his beloved sister, Dheeran promised her that he would get his revenge against those who had humiliated him.

But as the days passed, a different, much larger fire began to burn in his heart.

He realized his true duty was to his nation, not to a family feud. Leaving the past behind, Dheeran Chinnamalai along with Ulagapuram Rasappan and many other chieftains rode off to join Tipu Sultan in the great war for freedom!
